

Nicola is currently the presiding member of the Maranatha Christian School Board of Trustees, where she has served for over six years. She has a background in law and several years of experience working in government, including involvement in Crown property and Treaty negotiations. Nicola brings a broad range of expertise to her new role.

As a parent of three children attending a state-integrated school, Nicola deeply values the special character of these schools and is strongly committed to supporting them. She recognizes the significant contribution the Association of Integrated Schools NZ has made in strengthening state-integrated schools over the years. Nicola is excited to join an organisation that has provided such meaningful support to its members and is looking forward to building on the strong foundation laid by Mark Larson.
